DYSLEXIA

A Learning Disability of the brain control

Why Inclusion and More ?!!!!

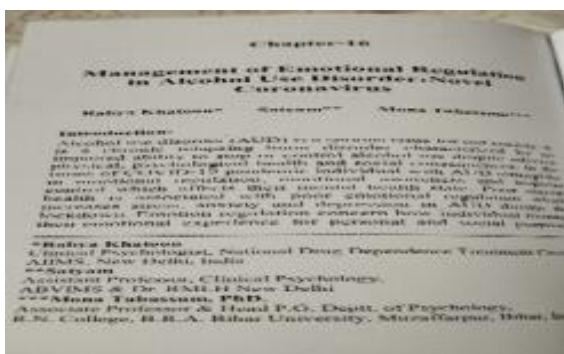

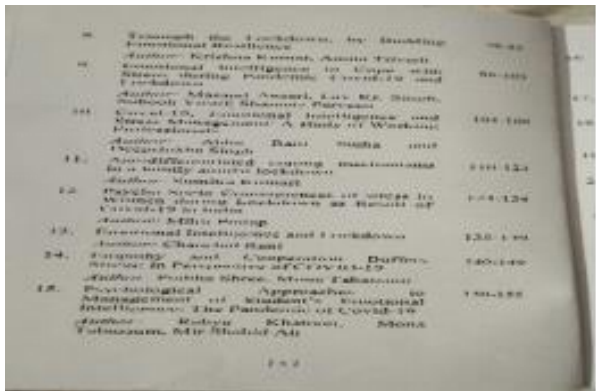

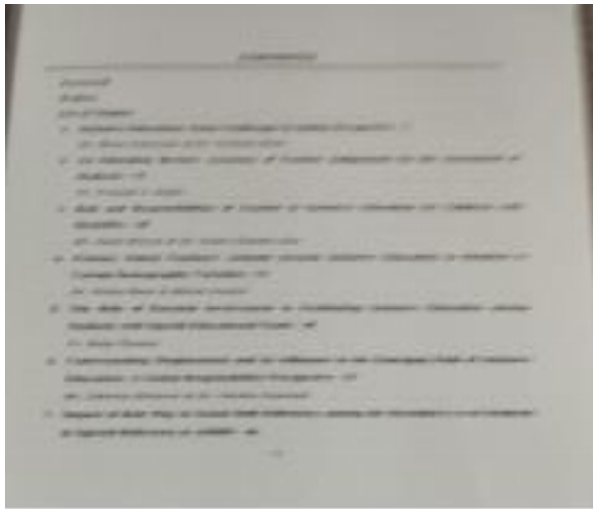

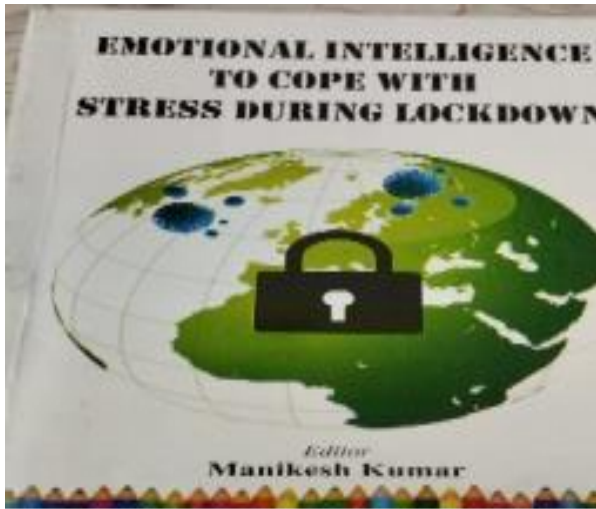

Introduction

Dyslexia is a learning disability that affects a person's ability to read, write, and spell. It is a brain-based condition that is not related to intelligence or vision. People with dyslexia often struggle with reading and writing, but they may have strengths in other areas, such as oral communication, problem-solving, and creative thinking. It is important to understand that dyslexia is not a character flaw or a sign of low ability. It is a neurological difference that can be managed with appropriate support and accommodations. Inclusion in the classroom is essential for students with dyslexia to reach their full potential. Teachers and parents should work together to create a supportive learning environment that meets the needs of all students. This includes providing extra time for assignments, using multisensory teaching methods, and offering alternative ways to demonstrate knowledge. Early identification and intervention are key to helping students with dyslexia succeed. With the right support, students with dyslexia can thrive in school and in life.

2. To examine the formation and growth and development of the term in colonial period
3. To learn the Critical Race Perspectives and challenging of popular and scientific myths
4. To assess the Anti-apartheid movement

1.1 Introduction

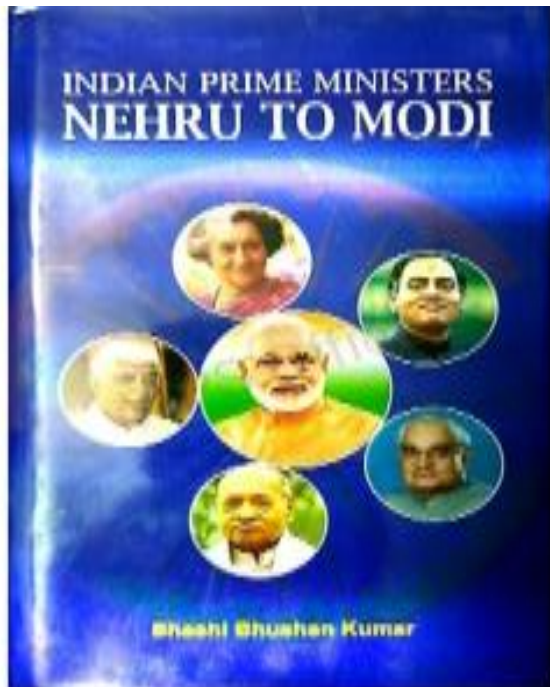

The chapter introduces race as a basis of classification of human beings across the globe based on certain physical and social characteristics. It discusses how the categorization is based on biological evolution of race knowledge in solidarity of one white and one non-white people. There is an attempt to discuss race in socially constructed and historically informed category through colonial scientific discourse. Racial discrimination considered itself through the political mobilization called apartheid which is the scenario of following section. The last part deals with a brief account of anti-apartheid movement.

1.1 Race: A basis of classification of Human Race

Race is a basis of classification of human beings on certain biological characteristics generally, in some diverse social groupings. Standard knowledge of Biology, 2011. By classical social groupings could mean that a biologically based racial characteristics will be shared by a single social group and not the other race. In the biological differences

Cooperative Federalism in India: Reflections on Realities and Desirability

Dr. Shashi Bhushan Kumar and Dr. Ranjiv Kumar

In the twentieth year of our coverage of Indian politics, we are actually questioning the ability to survive our federal polity and political system with which we have been struggling since independence. In the past, we have seen great and serious attempts to strengthen the federal polity and political system. However, the political system in India is still a long way from being a true federal system. It is the structural weaknesses of the federal polity and political system that has largely caused the current crisis in the system of inter-state relations.

India takes great pride in describing itself as the world's largest democracy. However, this democracy is meaningless if it is not accompanied by a federal structure. While democracy and federalism are two separate concepts, they are inter-related and inter-dependent. The success of a federal system depends on the quality of the political system. Democracy and federalism are two sides of the same coin. The success of a federal system depends on the quality of the political system. Democracy and federalism are two sides of the same coin.

Evaluation of Federalism in India
In this book, the authors have presented a critical analysis of the federal polity and political system in India. The book is a must-read for all those who are interested in the study of Indian politics.
